

Blenheim Palace Natural Mineral Water is part of a centuries-old tradition which began in the twelfth century when Henry II built a pleasure pool for his mistress, Rosamund Clifford at Blenheim Palace. The pool was fed by an ancient spring which, legend maintains, has never dried.

When demand for the water outstripped supply in recent years, a further source was found in the park and a bottling plant was established. It is from this aquifer that this prestigious and delicious drink is drawn today.

Of superb quality and natural purity, Blenheim Palace Natural Mineral Water is available exclusively in glass bottles.
